Graduate Studies in Art Education

Master of Arts
Doctor of Philosophy

"my research interests include the problems of individual versus societal intentions in art schooling; the social and political dynamics of taste in visual culture; ethnographic and interpretive research methods"

Cathy Mullen Brooks, Assistant Professor
Graduate Program Director
PhD Pennsylvania State University

"I am persuing two related areas of research . . . the first centers on painting installation and extends through to multimedia, the second is a search for a structuralist map to represent with precision the complexity of art practices and beliefs."

Stan Horner, Associate Professor
MSc Syracuse University

"my interest in the history of Canadian art education includes the effects of American art education theory on Canadian developments, and the relationship of teachers' artistic background to their teaching practice. I am currently involved in an historical study of the pedagogical career of Anne Savage, pioneer Canadian art teacher."

Leah Sherman, Professor
Chairperson, Department of Art Education and Art Therapy
MA New York University

"my current research concerns applying developmental and perceptual psychology to the field of art education, particularly to studies and interventions in the area of unusual drawing skill, i.e. the works of prodigies or autistic children."

David Pariser, Associate Professor
EdD Harvard University

"I am concerned with the philosophical problems and issues which are generated by art practices in the studio; the way in which art making functions as a way of inquiry, particularly with regard to and in contrast with general theories of knowledge."

Gary Rosine, Associate Professor
MFA Columbia University
PhD Pennsylvania State University

"my research includes cross-cultural research in Canada, Brazil and the United States on teachers understandings of their student's stereotypes in art; sex stereotypes in art and art processes; inter-disciplinary research; feminist research and social change."

Elizabeth J. Sacca, Associate Professor
Principal, Simone de Beauvoir Institute
